TOURNEY TIPS

Well, our boys, who came out of the Lodi tournament last Sunday with a first position protected by a margin of 96 pins by virtue of their roll of 3,159 pins, have a little more competition.

The "latest dope" is that the Brunswick team has rolled into second place, just 24 pins behind the El Dorado County team and at that time, there were about 32 more teams to bowl.

El Dorado County bowlers will be holding their breath until the Lodi meeting ends on October 27th.

NAZI PLANES MASS NEAR MOSCOW

Russians And British Deny Nazi Claims Of Weakening Defenses

By JOE ALEX MORRIS
U. P. Foreign News Editor

Adolf Hitler was reported today to be massing large luftwaffe forces to blast a path to Moscow but British and Russian reports indicated Soviet lines are bending only slightly despite a Nazi claim that Moscow's outer defenses have been broken "on a broad front."

The German high command claimed that Panzer spearheads have crashed through Soviet defenses to the west and southwest of the capital to points within 37½ miles of the Kremlin.

Southward the Nazi advance into the Donets basin appeared to be continuing and there were hints in Berlin that the capture of Rostov may be at hand. The first shakeup in the Soviet high military command was revealed in dispatches from Kuibyshev, temporary capital, disclosing that Marshal Semyon Timoshenko has been relieved as chief of command in the Moscow defense sector.

Frederick C. Oschsner, United Press staff correspondent on a conducted tour of German rear lines in Russia, reported from Kiev that the Germans are utilizing all their propaganda resources in an attempt to win the good will of the Ukrainians.

Oschsner reported at least 50,000 persons homeless in Kiev and said about 500,000 of the city's normal 800,000 population remained. Many skilled workers and technicians were evacuated by the Soviets before abandoning the city.

The German high command claimed that four more ships have been sunk from a British North Atlantic convoy, a total of 32,000 ton including, it was claimed, the 14,000-ton liner Aurania, being used by the British as a transport. This brought British sea losses to 125,000 tons in the last five days, the Germans claimed.

In the occupied areas of Europe trouble continued to mount. Fifty more Frenchmen will die at midnight tonight if the slayers of the German commandant at Nanes are not apprehended before that hour. Another 100 are being held for quick execution in the slaying of a Nazi officer at Bordeaux yesterday.

BRITAIN'S WAR POLICY STIRS SHARY DEBATE

Foreign Minister Eden Reveals Empire's Lack Of Defense Last Year

LONDON, (UP)—A bitter attack on government members and demands for quick armed aid to Russia to "smash Hitler now" before the "God given chance" to make Germany fight on two fronts is lost were made in parliament today urging a vigorous debate on the war.

The debate, during which foreign minister Anthony Eden disclosed that trained and well-equipped British troops in England and the middle east were virtually non-existent at one time last summer, (meaning 1940) was featured by:

1. A statement by Minister of Supply Lord Beaverbrook that America and Britain were making good on promises to deliver war aid to Russia and to "restore fully" all tanks and planes lost by Russia; and that Josef V. Stalin, taking a long-range view, believed that tanks would finally decide the war.

2. A demand by Philip J. Noel-Baker, laborite, that British armed forces from the middle east be sent into Russia beside the Red army in defense of the Ukraine and the Caucasus areas and that R. A. F. planes strike at the luftwaffe on the eastern front.

3. A statement by Aneurin Bevan, laborite, asking "how far from high treason" was the statement of Lord Halifax, British ambassador to the United States, that the British could not invade western Europe. William Gallacher, communist, interposed: "We know he is a blackguard." He warned Prime Minister Winston Churchill that "it is time to get rid of some of these men who will drag him down."

4. A warning by Joseph Edgwood, laborite, against "tempting" peace offers to be expected from Hitler in event of a Russian surrender and a statement that "there is no hope for us but to smash Hitler now that we have got the God-given chance."

5. A call by Beaverbrook for all British workers to be prepared, after providing the tanks, airplanes and guns needed by Britain, to rush from their work benches and take up arms to defend Britain against invasion as the Russian workers are defending Moscow.

6. A statement by Eden declaring that the government reiterated its pledges to help Russia in every way and never to negotiate with Hitler "or any of his associates on any subject now, in the future or at any time."

Eden's statement was sensational in that he disclosed the unpreparedness of Britain last summer. He said that at one time there had not been one fully-trained and equipped division in Britain.

ALL-STAR 4-H QUARTET GET PINS ACHIEVEMENT NIGHT

Awards, Received Too Late Last Year, Will Be Presented 1940 Winners As Well As To 1941 Choices By County Key Banker

The annual Achievement Night of the county 4-H Clubs, on November 8 at the Missouri Flat Community Hall, will be an unusual occasion in that pins will be presented to four 4-H Club all stars.

This feature arises as a result of the circumstance that last year the pins failed to arrive in time for presentation, and so they will be presented this year to J. C. Wunschel and Elaine Muir, who were the all-stars last year.

This year's all-stars are Eileen Veerkamp, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. V. R. Veerkamp, of Rescue, and Everett Fox, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Fox, of Brandon.

The pins will be presented by E. Ogden Hook, county key banker, who also will present pins to the 4-H Club members generally who have earned them by their achievement in project work during the past year.

These two All-Stars for this yea will attend the State Convention of 4-H All-Stars for three days at Berkeley, during Easter vacation. At the convention two boys and two girls will be selected as Diamond All-Stars to go to the national convention in Washington, D. C.

The local Bank of America pays the expenses of the two All-Stars from this county each year from a special fund set aside from the winnings at previous county fairs.

Eileen Veerkamp, a county high school student, has completed ten years of 4-H Club work carrying out the clothing project for the entire ten years. In addition, she carried poultry as a supplementary agricultural project for the first two years and a dairy project for four years starting with a dairy calf and completing four years with two cows and one bred heifer in addition to the calves sold.

She has held offices in the club of treasurer, club reporter, and club secretary, in addition to being club activities manager, and has participated in all of the activities of her club.

Everett Fox, a county high school student, has completed six years of 4-H club work with dairying as the main project. In the first year he started with a pure-bred Jersey heifer calf and built this up so that at the end of his six years, he has a good start in the dairy business. In his sixth year, he now has two cows, one bred heifer, and two heifer calves. In addition to the dairy project, Everett purchased a pure-bred registered Chester White gilt and a registered Chester White boar last year. This year he sold nine market hogs and has on hand nine feeder pigs weighing about 100 pounds each. Everett states that these two projects work well together on his farm since the pigs utilize the skim milk which together with home grown grains and pasture makes pig raising a desirable supplementary project. Everett utilizes cull dried fruit as part of the pig ration. His records show a profit of $365.55 for the six years of his club work.

In addition to his home projects, Everett has been an active member of his 4-H club having held the office of club reporter one year and president of the club for two years. He has participated in his 4-H club community activities.

One of the important things that Everett has learned in his 4-H club work is the value of feeding balanced rations. This was demonstrated by him at the 4-H Club Achievement Night last year in which he showed the various feeds goes to make up a balanced ration. and quantities of each food that

U.S. ARMY AIR FORCE TO BE ENLARGED

Increase To Total Of 8 Combat Groups Ordered; 2 New Commands Planned

WASHINGTON, (UP) — The war department today announced that the current 54-combat group program of the army air forces will be expanded eventually to provide for 84 combat groups.

The department said the expansion is necessary to meet growing requirements for adequate defense of the United States and "the areas within the western hemisphere vital to that defense."

A number of the new groups will be assigned to overseas departments, officials said. The bulk however, will be assigned to the air force combat command, which is the fighting force of the army air forces and includes bombardment, pursuit and reconnaissance aviation.

A combat group is composed of two or more squadrons, depending on the type of equipment and their tactical missions.

Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson said at a press conference that the original 54-group program announced last January was "not exactly completed but well on the way."

Stimson said he could not say how many planes would be required for the enlarged program. It had been estimated that 25,000 planes would be needed for the 54-group program.

The new program contemplates an increase in non-commissioned strength of the air forces to more than 400,000 flying cadets and enlisted men by June 30, 1942. Expansion later to 500,000 is possible, the department said.

It was also announced today that aviation components of the Hawaiian and Panama Canal departments will be organized into department air forces under command of their respective department commanders to attain the unity of command essential for successful operations.

Stimson also told reporters that a group of Chinese has arrived in this country for training by the U. S. Army as pilots and mechanics. The training, presumably, will be financed by lend-lease funds.

Baltimore Receives Exact Duplicate Of Original "Star Spangled Banner"

A huge flag which is the first exact duplicate of the original "Star Spangled Banner"—was presented to the city of Baltimore recently with impressive ceremonies and it is now preserved in the War Memorial Building there.

The original flag was flying above Fort McHenry during the attack on the city in September, 1814, and it inspired Francis Scott Key to write his immortal poem.

In the presence of representatives of historical and patriotic societies, and of the United States treasury, war and navy departments, and thousands of other persons, the duplicate was presented to the Hon. Howard W. Jackson, Mayor of Baltimore, in ceremonies at the War Memorial Plaza.

The presentation was made by George B. Sippel of Cincinnati, president of the Master Brewers Association of America on the occasion of its 38th Annual Convention. The ceremonies included an address by Arthur P. Sewell, curator of the "Flag House" on the history of the "Star Spangled Banner," the unfurling of the duplicate and singing of the anthem by an audience of thousands. Colonel Edwin Butcher, chief of staff of the Third Corps Area, represented the United States Army. At the conclusion of the program, the flag was carried through the crowd to the War Memorial by 12 young women, representing the Daughters of the Defenders. They were dressed in costumes of 1814.

The original flag was made by Mrs. Mary Young Pickersgill on the malting floor of a Baltimore brewery and, because of incorrect traditions regarding its size, no exact duplicate of it has been made until this year. The original specifications found in historical archives showed that the flag was 30 feet by 42 feet 2 inches and consisted of 15 stripes and 15 stars. The tattered remnants of the original flag are in the National Museum in Washington. It was riddled by shot and shell during the battle, and was preserved in the family of Major Armistead, the Fort's Commanding Officer until it was made a national relic.

Love in Disguise

by MARY KEAS

Copr. 1941 by United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Peggy O'Toole, Irish-American girl, after breaking her engagement to George ("Jimmie") Meredith, is injured in an accident. The doctors say she may never walk again. Jimmie begs her to renew their engagement, but she thinks his proposal is prompted by pity, so refuses him. Her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Greer, take her to Paris to see a specialist, but he says he can do nothing for her. Meanwhile, she has met Lieutenant Paul Rimini, Italian air officer, who proves to be the Marchese della Chiesa. He becomes very attentive, and takes Peggy and her grandparents to the villa of his aunt, the Comtesse de Bryse. Peggy grows very fond of him, but cannot forget Jimmie. Then she hears a rumor that Jimmie, back in New York, is courting another girl, Paul's friend, Captain Pietro Luggi, former Italian army surgeon, arrives at the villa. When he hints to Peggy that Paul is in love with her, she says she has no right to burden any man with a crippled wife.

CHAPTER XXVIII

THAT very evening, Paul sought out Mr. Greer. He found the old man alone in the library.

"Signor Greer . . . may I have a few minutes of your time, sir?"

Mr. Greer flicked the ashes from his long cigar.

"Of course, Paul—what is it?"

For an officer and a brave man, Lieutenant Paul Rimini was, at this moment, looking distinctly unsure of himself. There was a fine beading on his forehead.

"Signor I desire to ask your permission——"

Just then, Mrs. Greer came through the doorway.

"Oh, pardon me," she said, hesitating.

"Please join us, Signora — this concerns you, too," Paul urged.

When she was seated, however, he seemed unable to go on. The big clock in the corner ticked loudly.

Finally he blurted out. "I—I—love your granddaughter — and I want your permission to ask her to marry me!"

Henry Greer choked over his cigar. He looked at his wife. A little smile was hovering about her lips.

He turned back to the young man. "You have shown us a fine consideration, Paul. Nowadays, young men usually ask the girl first, and then tell the parents or grandparents about it later!"

Paul's face lit up. "Then I do have your permission, sir?"

"Certainly, my lad! And good luck to you!"

When Paul had made a precipitate departure, Henry Greer said, "Humph!" and puffed furiously at his cigar.

Mrs. Greer sighed. "Isn't it wonderful—for Peggy? Just think of her as a marchesa — with a castle in Italy. . . ."

Her husband looked at her. "You think she'll accept him?"

"Accept him? Of course she will!"

"I suppose so, but I wonder. I had an idea she was considerably interested in that boy back home—that Meredith boy."

Mrs. Greer frowned. "Oh, perhaps she was—at the time. But I don't think it amounted to anything. I'm sure she's forgotten him long ago!"

MEANWHILE, in the moonlit garden, Paul was at last telling Peggy what every one else had previously hinted to her—that he was in love with her.

She listened in silence, with bowed head.

"I'm sorry, Paul," she whispered, when he had finished. "I was afraid of this—that you were getting too fond of me. I had hoped we could go on as we were—just good friends."

The eagerness vanished from Paul's face. "Then — you haven't forgotten—him? The young man back home?"

"There is nobody waiting back home — or anywhere else," Peggy said slowly, tears in her eyes. "Can't you see that there never will be any one? Only the well and strong should marry, Paul. . . ."

He stared at her. "So—that's the reason?" he said wonderingly.

"It wouldn't be fair to you, Paul——"

He seized her hands. "Oh, carissima mia, how can you say such a thing when you know I love you so! I have loved you from the first time we met—from the first moment I caught sight of your dear face. . . ."

"Oh, Paul, I am so, so sorry. . . ."

He rose and stood over her. "Tell me, Peggy — truthfully — is that wheel chair the only thing that stands between us? If — if you could walk — would you marry me?"

"But I'll never walk again, Paul!" she evaded. "All the doctors have said——"

"But if you could, you would marry me?" he persisted.

She was silent, thinking of that item in the paper about Jimmie.

"I—I don't know," she said, at last. "I really don't. But—but—I might. . . ."

He whirled and started back toward the house. She stared after him in blank astonishment.

"Paul!" she cried. "Where are you going?"

But he didn't stop to answer.

CAPTAIN LUGGI was indulging in a lonely game of billiards in the recreation room when Paul burst in on him.

"Pietro! Put up that cue and listen to me!" Paul wrested the cue from his hand. "Pietro . . . I have just asked Peggy to marry me. . . ."

The captain's eyebrows went up. "Indeed? And she accepted you?"

Paul turned away. "No—she refused me."

"Hum-m," murmured the captain, shaking his head. He sighed. "Just as she said she would——"

Paul whirled. "What do you mean? What has she said to you? You know, then, why she has refused me?"

"Yes, my boy." The older man placed both hands on Paul's shoulders. "I'm so sorry. Signorina O'Toole is such a charming girl. It is most unfortunate that she——"

"But she's wrong, Pietro! It's so foolish for her to have this idea—only I can't make her see it that way. That's why I've come to you. You can help me—you're the only one who can. You've got to!"

"I? I'll be glad to do what I can, but I don't quite see——"

"I mean you've got to get her out of that wheel chair, Pietro!"

The captain stared at Paul in astonishment.

"My dear boy, you don't know what you're saying! If Doucet couldn't do it——"

"Hang Doucet! I'm not talking to Doucet—I don't know Doucet! But I do know you—and I know what you've done for some of our soldiers! What you did in the World War — what you've done since."

"But that was entirely different!"

"Listen to me — have you ever done an operation of this particular type?" Paul demanded.

The captain hesitated. "Well yes," he admitted. "Several of them—but the risk is very great. I remember one case. . . ."

THE NEW COACHES - By Jack Sords

The FARMERS CORNER

by RALPH H. TAYLOR

Executive Secretary Agricultural Council of California

This topsy turvy world, with its sudden and radical shifts from over production to scarcity, usually followed by subsequent shifts from shortages to surpluses, plays strange pranks an the farmer.

The 1942 production goals for the American agriculture, according to history, with farmers being urged to join in an all-out drive to produce for all the nations which stand between this country and Hitler.

Pushed aside now is all the talk of production curtailment and "plowing under," which characterized the New Deal program of a few years ago, and that old shibboleth of World War days—"Food will win the war and write the peace"—is back in the headlines again.

There is a striking similarity between the statements of today and the statements which were made back in 1917 and 1918.

The goals for 1942 call for the largest production in the history of American agriculture," asserts Secretary Wickard, "but we are not going to have to plow up the hills and the plains to get it. We have adequate reserves of feed grains for increased production of livestock and it will not be necessary materially to increase total crop acreage next year."

In the last part of that statement, there is a note of caution, born, perhaps, of a recognition of the chaotic conditions which followed World War No. 1, when American agriculture—geared to produce for the whole world—was left literally holding the bag after the armistice.

The 1942 program, as outlined by the Secretary of Agriculture, emphasizes increased production of hogs, eggs, evaporated milk, dry skim milk, cheese and chickens—products most vitally needed by the British, as well as American consumers. The plan also calls for unlimited sugar proudction, nearly double peanut production, slightly increased acreage of corn and other feed crops, more soy beans and potatoes, and 1,329,000 more home gardens.

Mr. Wickard has set a 1942 goal of 125 billion pounds of milk, compared with an estimated 1941 production of less than 117 billion pounds.

Production of eggs would be increased from 3,676,000,000 dozens to four billion dozen.

There will be need, Mr. Wickard reported, for 79,300,000 hogs to be slaughtered in 1942, compared with 71,000,000 this year; 28 million beef and veal animals, compared with 25,100,000; 750 million chickens, as compared with 680 million; 22,900,000 lambs and sheep compared with 22,400,000.

The corn acreage goal was set at between 87,500,000 and 90 million acres, compared with 87,353,000 acres this year. The acreage for oats was increased from 38,197,000 to 40 million; barley acreage was reduced slightly from 14,813,000 to between 14,250,000 and 14,500,000; sorghum grains increased from 9,285,000 0this year to between 9,250,000 and 9,500,000 acres; and hay from 73,933,000 to between 74 and 75 million acres.

The cotton acreage goal was reestablished at about the same as the 23,519,000 planted this year. The 1942 wheat goal, previously established by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, will be between 50 and 55 million acres, compared with 63,503,000 this year.

Mr. Wickard established the rice goal for 1942 at 1,200,000 acres, as compared with 1,186,000 this year. The white potato goal was raised from 2,988,000 to 3,060,000 acres and sweet potatoes from 843,000 to 850,000.

The program calls for an increase from 1,843,000 to 1,935,000 acres of vegetables for fresh use and from 1,487,000 to 1,500,000 for processing. And it sets a goal of 5,760,000 farm gardens, compared with 4,431,000 this year.

All of which indicates that American agriculture is expected to hit its peak production next year, with its products destined to play a dramatic and vital part in the battle to stave off Hitler's dreams of world conquest. It is hoped, however, that the lessons of the first World War will help to avoid another calamity for American agriculture when the war is done; and that farmers will realize that, since no working solution has yet been found for the ups and downs of successive periods of prosperity and adversity, they should pay off their debts while they can, and accumulate reserves for the inevitable time of depression which fill follow.
